Lajes Field, Azores

What's inside?

Workers are preparing for Praia Fest which kicks off Saturday. For information on the activities planned for the nine-day event, see related story on Page 5.

News briefs

New channel guide next week

The new AFN channel will be listed in the tv guide starting Aug. 10.

Beira Mar construction update

Wednesday and Thursday, workers will shift the lane closure on the public road at the Beira Mar construction site. Civil engineer officials expect the entrance into the housing area that's currently closed to open around Aug. 15.

The entrances into the parking lots for housing complexes T-1533 and T-1534 will be closed for approximately 10 days for paving. This will cause residents and visitors to overflow into other residential parking areas. Residents will be notified of the exact dates.

Self help store open Saturday

The self help store, Bldg. T-561, will be open Saturday, 10 a.m.-2 p.m. For information call 2-3784.

Air Force names Global Hawk bases

Lajes is divert field for new unmanned aircraft

LANGLEY AIR FORCE BASE, Va. (AFPN)— The Air Force selected Beale Air Force Base, Calif., as the first Global Hawk main operating base, July 27.

Air Force officials recently completed an environmental assessment and found basing 18 of the unmanned aerial vehicles at Beale would result in no significant environmental impacts.

This decision follows a Jan. 19 Air Force announcement declaring Beale as the preferred location for the beddown of the UAV. Other bases under consideration included Edwards AFB, Calif.; Ellsworth AFB, S.D.; Tinker AFB, Okla.; and Wright-Patterson AFB, Ohio.

Global Hawk provides Air Force commanders high-altitude, long-endurance, near-real-time intelligence.

Help celebrate milestone for new E-5s

Chief Master Sgt. of the Air Force
Jim Finch

WASHINGTON (AFPN) -- We recently announced the release of the staff sergeant selection list - a time for recognition, celebration and congratulations. Promotion to staff sergeant is an important milestone in any Air Force career, since it marks the transition from airman to non-commissioned officer.

Surprisingly, I've heard a few comments expressing concern over the significant number of people accomplishing this milestone, and I've received several inquiries asking why the selection rate was so high.

Basically, we have had an increased number of vacancies at the staff sergeant level, coupled with a decreased pool of eligible senior airmen competing to fill them. This translated to higher selection rates, as evidenced by this year's 64 percent and last year's 50 percent.

The increased vacancies can be attributed in part to the decreased retention of mid-level NCOs in recent years and our initiative to reshape the balance of NCOs to airmen in our Air Force.

In 1999, we received authorization to increase the percentage of the Air Force enlisted force allowed to serve in the top five grades from 48.5 percent to 56 percent. This initiative allowed us to start reducing the average time in service required to promote our mid-level NCOs.

Despite this explanation, some still speculate that the real reason we increased promotion rates was simply to improve retention. While this wasn't the primary goal behind changing our enlisted force structure, we do hope earlier promotions will translate to improved manning and retention.

As most probably already know, we are still short mid-level NCOs in many career fields.

Regarding the few comments I've heard about promoting people too quickly, I only need to look at this year's selectees to see we are on track.

Of the 20,793 people named on this staff sergeant selection list, more than 90 percent received the top rating on their most recent enlisted performance report. This tells me that at least three people in their rating chain believed they were ready for immediate promotion and were well-prepared to assume added responsibilities of the next rank.

I personally subscribe to the theory that improving an organization requires everyone to ensure their replacements have the tools, training, and support necessary for continued success. In that vein, I urge everyone currently serving in a supervisory position to help our new staff sergeant selectees adjust to their upcoming role as NCOs.

At times, this can be as simple as explaining the logic behind specific decisions or reminding them of the vital part they play in executing our Air Force mission. Keep in mind, these will be the professionals responsible for ensuring most tasks are done correctly.

Also, a little recognition for jobs well done can instill great confidence in new supervisors. Lastly, we must provide all selectees the opportunity to complete the Airman Leadership School before their line number comes due.

Remember, developing the next generation of enlisted leaders is an investment in our future. The effort we give today will ensure they are prepared to keep our Air Force the best in the world for years to come.

Civilians important to Air Force success

Maj. Karen Bruce
56th Contracting Squadron

LUKE AIR FORCE BASE, Ariz. — It's important for those of us in uniform to remember the valuable contributions of our civilian colleagues. Defense Department civilian employees have long made significant contributions to the defense of our nation and the Air Force.

When uniformed people are called away to places such as Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and Bosnia, our civilian team members pick up the slack without missing a step. Sorties are flown and goals are met.

Civilian employees are our continuity. Uniformed people come and go with the ebb of each permanent change-of-station move or deployment. Our trusted civilian employees become the bridge between stability and continuity, and the refreshing, innovative ideas from newly arriving military people.

Civilians are our resident experts and often train new troops, whether they're airmen fresh out of basic training or new officers.

Most importantly, our civilian colleagues are leaders and role models who play a critical role in shaping tomorrow's Air Force. This includes serving as role models to help develop leadership skills, old-fashioned people skills and a strong work ethic, as well as to ingrain the values of integrity and excellence.

This is why it is so vital civilians understand and uphold their unique responsibilities in this area, and why uniformed people must understand it takes the total team, including civilians, to accomplish the mission.

Civilians also freely give their time and energy helping improve our military community, to better the lives of our men and women in uniform and their families. Many times, civilians take personal leave to wash cars to earn money for squadron morale funds. They contribute money to the Air Force Aid Society and participate in community charity events. Everyday I'm reminded how true the Air Force "We take care of our own" refrain is. Civilians are an integral part of our ability to provide help to people in need.

Civilian employees are critical to our Air Force family whose contributions are important to successful mission accomplishment.

Some civilians lose post differential

Staff Sgt. Beverly Isik
Public affairs

More than 100 Department of Defense stateside-hire civilians and Department of Defense Dependent Schools employees here stopped receiving Post Differential pay July 29.

The entitlement is about five percent of base pay, according to Robin Bailey, director of Lajes Civilian Personnel Office.

State Department officials have specific criteria, or a scoring system, to make this type of determination, Bailey explained. This year, Lajes' score didn't reach the level required to retain the differential.

"Post differential is established for a place when, and only when, the place involves extraordinarily difficult living conditions, excessive physical hardship, or notably unhealthy conditions affecting the majority of employees officially stationed at that location," he said. "Living costs are not considered in that determination."

Differential is designed to provide additional compensation to employees for service overseas where environmental conditions are significantly different than in the States.

"It's a recruitment and retention incentive," the personnel officer said.

Employees like Cynthia Simons, Lajes Commissary grocery manager, believe conditions here are significantly different.

"I don't feel it was an accurate assessment," she said. "Living conditions here are not equal to the States. I don't have central heat or central air in my house, and that raises the cost of my utility bills. The differential paid those utilities."

Simons will leave in two weeks for an assignment to Incirlik Air Station, Turkey, but said if she didn't have the assignment, losing the differential would make her start looking for one.

Bailey said it's too early to see the impact the cut will have on retention.

"But I'm fairly certain it will impact recruitment," he said. "We will be working hard to sell Lajes to prospective employees and will be gathering data to reflect the impact of the change on our ability to recruit and retain employees. Base leaders plan to readdress this issue with State Department officials."

Servicemembers receive Cost of Living Allowance in some locations based on local currency rates, studies of prices in the overseas area, level of exchange and commissary support, and surveys of people's shopping habits.

"Post differential is totally different than COLA," said Staff Sgt. Steve Giavara, NCO in charge of finance customer service. "Civilians got the differential every month, military people only received COLA four months out of the last 12."

smoothly from initial beddown to full operational capability," said Gen. John P. Jumper, commander of Air Combat Command.

"It also ensures cultural issues associated with transitioning from manned to unmanned reconnaissance are in the hands of our current high-altitude reconnaissance experts at Beale. They are best suited to complete the transition with the least disruption to the mission.

"The first beddown location will be just that - the first, not the last," Jumper said. "It is important the first Global Hawk site be the best place for us to find out all we can about its capability, and the best place to fold it into a critical ongoing mission."

Air Force officials are confident the Global Hawk program will be a tremendous success. As such, the bases not selected for the initial beddown, as well as others, could be candidates for future missions and basing.

The Air Force anticipates the first of the 18 primary aircraft and personnel to begin arriving at Beale AFB in 2002 and 2003, with initial capability to support limited operations beginning in 2003.

Lajes NCOs trade stripes for butter bars

Tech. Sgt. Keith Moreno, 65th Communications Squadron

Staff Sgt. Beverly Isik
Public affairs

The Air Force announced, July 25, that two Lajes NCOs were among 153 enlisted members across the service who will be trading in their stripes for gold bars.

Tech. Keith Moreno, 65th Communications Squadron, and Staff Sgt. Steve Giavara, 65th Comptroller Flight, were selected to attend Officer Training School by a selection board that met in San Antonio in June.

Giavara, NCO in charge of finance customer service, knew he wanted to be an officer before he joined the Air Force.

"My younger brother went to West Point and I was so impressed by the whole thing," he said. "It gave me a new perspective of what the military was all about, and I knew it was something I needed to do."

Even though he had a bachelor's degree in history, the Connecticut native was turned down when he tried to join the Air Force as an officer because his grade point average wasn't high enough, he said.

Turned down three more times in the years following his enlistment, Giavara wasn't one to give up easily.

In 1999, after spending several years stationed in Europe, he decided to hit the books again and started working on a master's degree. Today, he's one class away from getting his master's in international relations, this time with a 3.6 GPA.

"It was a long time coming," he said. "All I can say is if people really want to do this, and they think it's worth it, they shouldn't get discouraged if they get turned down a few times. Life's full of disappointments. As far as I'm concerned, it's like they always say, 'What doesn't kill you only makes you stronger.'"

Unlike Giavara, Moreno had more luck and was selected his first time around.

The NCO in charge of Lajes' base land mobile radio section said some people may feel like they could never get a degree because of busy schedules, permanent change of station moves and temporary duty assignments. But, there's always hope.

"Giavara and I are old-timers," the 14-year veteran said. "If you've got a dream, go for it. Don't ever give up."

He started working on his bachelor's degree in information systems management in 1995, but got serious about it 1998, saying distance learning through the University of Maryland is an excellent way for people to work around hectic schedules.

Both NCOs should receive class assignment information about eight weeks after their physical is certified for commissioning.

The board consisted of at least three colonels and considered 470 applications, selecting 335 servicemembers and civilians.

Objectively, board members considered each applicant's academic discipline, GPA and Air Force Officer Qualifying Test scores.

Subjectively, they evaluated work experience, accomplishments, adaptability, character, leadership ability, potential for growth and other recommendations. Performance reports and commander's recommendations were also evaluated for active-duty members.

For information concerning OTS and the application process, active-duty members should call a representative at education services office at 2-3355.

Praia Fest begins Saturday

Eduardo Lima
Public affairs

Praia Fest kicks off Saturday and will highlight parades, concerts, sports activities, bullfights, a food fair and arts and crafts booths. This is the second year that the fest will have a food fair with restaurants from mainland Portugal and Spain. The fair will be officially inaugurated today at 6 p.m., alongside the Praia Marina. Restaurants will feature cuisine from the different regions of both countries daily starting at noon.

Concerts will feature artists from the United States, Germany, Brazil, mainland Portugal and the Azores. Musical styles will vary from Jazz to Samba to Folklore.

Col. Bill Percival, 65th Air Base Wing commander, is cautioning Team Lajes members who drink to take a taxi or designate a driver. Taxis will be parked on the street beside the post office at the main square and will cost about $6 to bring people back to the base.

Anyone needing a taxi can call the lodging office on base at 295-545-178 and a Portuguese front desk clerk will call the taxi.

Water, water every where?

Lajes maybe surrounded by water, but people should still try to conserve. The base water treatment plant can only produce 500,000 gallons of potable water daily. The plant has been running 24 hours a day for the past two weeks to keep up with the increasing amount of water people are using -- sometimes as much as 850,000-1,000,000 gallons. Base officials implemented a water conservation plan Tuesday limiting the days and times housing residents can water their lawns. People who live in odd-numbered houses are allowed to water their lawns from 6-8 a.m. and 6-8 p.m. on odd days. Those in even-numbered houses should observe the same hours on even days.
